International distribution and logistics in the 21st Century will be like at no other time. Thomas Friedman argues in his international best seller that today’s globalisation 3.0 is characterised by a greater number of ‘participants’ (i.e. localities and individuals) that are participating in the global economy and that it is driven by greater (inter)connectedness in which the level playing field has ‘flattened’.

To what extent is this experienced by multinational corporations and their senior management if at all? The rapid economic growth in many emerging markets sees more players participating in the global economy yet little harmonisation or flattening of the global level playing field in investment decisions and optimisation of global supply chains. In practice corporate executives face a much more complex process of globalisation through Foreign Direct Investment (FDI) and corporate supply chains.

The recent globalisation of international supply chains has resulted in an immense increase in the volumes of the cross-border flows of goods. The development of a responsive and efficient supply chain is now a strict requirement for companies involved in international trade. Optimisation of the supply chain may also result in realising enormous savings in the area of indirect taxes. Companies are becoming more aware of opportunities which may exist under free trade agreements, any duty planning techniques allowed by the relevant authorities and the postponement and/or avoidance of the payment of indirect taxes by using foreign trade zones/ports. Companies are also looking for the most favourable use of other available trade facilitating procedures.

World Free Zone Convention (www.freezones.org) & Investment Consulting Associates - ICA & TPA Global (www.ic-associates.com, www.tpa-global.com & www.locationselector.com), leading international consultants in supply chain management and corporate investor location, have teamed up to offer a unique opportunity to learn from experts who will share their experience and knowledge with participants.

Objectives

This new tailor made 2 ½ day training course will provide participants to focus on SCM within their own organisation’s strategies. They will gain an overview of some of the most recent developments in FDI and global SCM and develop an understanding of concepts and elements of integrated corporate supply chain management from a corporate perspective.

At the end of the workshop participants will be able to better integrate SCM principals in their investment promotion and aftercare strategies and tailor them to corporate needs. They will be better equipped in acting as advisors to corporate investment executives managing supply chains. The workshop requires active participation.

Training tools

Presentations, case studies, best practices, FDI software, role play, exercises and panel discussions.

This training programme will be held at the NH Doelen Hotel in central Amsterdam
Programme

Day One - Monday 23rd March 2009

Opening Remarks by WFZC and the Presenters

Afternoon Session Trends in global FDI and SCM during the economic downturn

The economic crisis will definitely influence the volume and structure of (future) global Foreign Direct Investment (FDI) flows. Not only are companies postponing FDI projects, many multinational corporations are also looking at ways to improve their working capital by restructuring and optimising their global supply chains. On the other hand are countries and regions experiencing a change in the competitiveness and attractiveness of their FDI environment?

- What are some of the recent trends in global FDI flows and can we make predictions about the future?
- What are some of the key issues in corporate supply chain management and optimisation?
- How do firms make international investment decisions and optimise supply chains?
- What are key location drivers and have they changed over the last two years?
- When and where do supply chain and logistics issues play a central role?

Evening Consultant Clinics: One-to-one meetings with key experts

Day Two - Tuesday 24th March 2009

Morning Session Integrated SCM & global sourcing

Today's global markets have made the corporate supply chain and the decision to “make or buy” increasingly multidimensional and more complex than ever to manage. SCM and global sourcing are also increasingly critical to the success and competitiveness of multinational companies. Improving and optimising supply chains increasingly requires a multi disciplinary and integrated approach.

- Which corporate and macro economic events trigger supply chain and sourcing strategies?
- What are best practice examples of successful SCM and global sourcing?
- How does an integrated and multi disciplinary approach to SCM look like?
- Which aspects are critical for corporate supply chain optimisation?

This session focuses on how multinational enterprises (MNEs) structure and manage their supply chains from an economic, operational and tax perspective.

Afternoon Session Customs

Companies operating on a global scale increasingly pay attention to customs and international trade regulations. Companies realise that local, regional and also global control of the related indirect tax function could result in the avoidance of risks and also related costs will become more manageable and measurable. Under the current economic conditions the slightest cost savings opportunity will be of competitive significance.

- How and why do multinational companies take account of customs and international trade regulation?
- How do companies manage risks and costs associated with indirect taxes?
- What are some of the requirements multinational companies look for in trade regulation at a national, regional and global policy level?
- What are the current international security and safety guidelines and multilateral initiatives?
- Which requirements should companies meet to qualify as a trusted party?

This session will particularly focus on the international security and safety framework and the way it has been implemented by certain customs jurisdictions around the world.

Evening Consultant Clinics: One-to-one meetings with key experts

Tour of Amsterdam (optional)
Day Three - Wednesday 25th March 2009

Morning Session Investment promotion from a supply chain angle

The techniques and rules of the game in investment promotion have changed substantially over the last 5 years. Many companies have become reluctant about Investment Promotion Intermediaries and often see them as providers of subjective information.

- What are some tips and techniques to counter the image companies have of investment promotion?
- What makes a successful pitch for new foreign investors?
- How and which supply chain and logistic aspects do we integrate in our value proposition?
- What facilitates the communication between investors and free zones?
- How to become a sparring partner for corporate executives managing international investment projects?

This session shares best and worst practices from investment promotion intermediaries around the world. It introduces concepts and strategies to become more successful in attracting FDI.

Afternoon Session Aftercare as an important reservoir for FDI in the current economic crisis

FDI by existing investors is often neglected as an important source of FDI in any location. In some countries more than 50% of FDI is conducted by existing investors through re-investments, diversification or expansion projects. If set up correctly aftercare strategies, or investor servicing strategies - the equivalent of Customer Relation Management (CRM) practices in marketing - can play an important role in generating more FDI in a specific country or region. It is not only more cost effective to increase the existing level of FDI, existing investors are often used as ‘testimonials’ or ‘ambassadors’ in the last phase of site selection projects by new potential investors.

- What makes a successful aftercare strategy?
- Best and worst practices of aftercare strategies among investment promotion organisations
- How to set up and manage an aftercare department?

The objective of this session is to further develop and enhance aftercare strategies and to provide concepts and input for IPAs and IPIs to serve and assist their clients in making competitive investment decisions. Illustrations and case studies will be provided that can assist IPIs in managing and setting up their own aftercare departments.

Participants will be provided with

- FDI software
- Certificate of Completion of Course
- One to one ‘clinics’ as required
- Mid-session refreshments and all lunches with soft drinks
- Full printed documentation
